4. The police working which is shrouded in secrecy should be made more open.
5. There should be some institutional arrangements to ensure effective enforcement and encourage attitudinal change in policemen.
6. Women social workers should be involved at the police station level for better appreciation and understanding of complaints of women.
7. Laws should be reviewed in view of the changing aspirations of the society in the post independence era.
8. The various suggestions made in the three major Commissions' reports since 1980 namely, Law Commission, National Police Commission and Jail Reforms Commission, should be studied and implemented.
9. The police should have an effective public relationship unit manned by professionals to project police image and keep contact with press on a continuous basis.
